Health and Wellbeing

Dear Provider,

Thank you for supporting a Wake Forest University student in obtaining medical or mental health treatment necessary for their academic success. We know that people who obtain necessary care during their college years are more likely to be successful in their lifetime than those who neglect their health needs. Your client/patient has taken a medical leave of absence from enrollment due to a specific medical or mental health condition. In order to resume enrollment, the student must provide documentation from a licensed health provider demonstrating that they have followed through with a course of treatment appropriate to the condition that necessitated their leave.

Please read the attached form carefully and provide your best recommendation for the student's status at the time of their petition to return (therapy, medication, etc.). Documentation should be submitted to medicalrequests@wfu.edu.

For your convenience, we have provided some benchmarks for what will be required of the student when they return to enrollment. Wake Forest University provides a rigorous academic and social environment where appropriate engagement with professors and peers is required for academic success. Students may also face additional academic hurdles to progress to specific majors, minors, or programs. We encourage you to discuss the student's academic plans with them when it is relevant to the treatment you are providing.

Please email us at medicalrequests@wfu.edu if you have any questions about the level of support the student will receive when returning to campus.

Readmission Questionnaire for Medical/Mental Health Continuous Enrollment

Instructions: This form must be completed by a licensed medical and/or mental health provider. For conditions that necessitated a withdrawal from the university, the licensed provider who provided care for the student while away from Wake Forest University should complete this form.

Please note: Completing this documentation does not guarantee a student's readmission to the university, but it is a requirement for consideration.

- Ability to resume full-time academic enrollment and on-campus independent living. Academic responsibility often consists of 12-15 credits of in-person rigorous academic course loads. Depending on a student's goals, it could also include extracurricular activities, leadership responsibilities, and possible athletics and/or research involvement. Students may live on campus in a room by themselves or with roommates. Regardless of the room environment, residence hall living requires being in community with others where students must maintain all daily living activities without supervision. Student and professional staff are available to respond to emergent situations only when notified. Pharmaceutical management is not provided. The student has demonstrated the willingness and ability to use available resources to maintain reasonable health and safety (attend outpatient therapy, take medication as prescribed, reach out for help as needed, etc.).
- Ability to resume full-time academic enrollment and off-campus living. Academic responsibility often consists of 12-15 credits of rigorous academic course loads. Depending on a student's goals, it could also include extracurricular activities, leadership responsibilities, and possible athletics and/or research involvement. Off-campus living is either alone or with roommates and without any oversight.
- Ability to resume full-time academic enrollment and study abroad the semester of return. Academic responsibility often consists of 12-15 credits of rigorous academic course loads. Depending on student's program and goals, it could also include immersing in a diverse culture, language, and adapting daily activities. Student will live in housing assigned by their program and may be on- or off-campus with various levels of support. Depending on the country, the student may or may not have access to comparable medical/mental health care.
- Ability to resume part-time academic enrollment and on-campus independent living. *Part-time academic responsibility often consists of 9-12 credits of rigorous academic course loads. Depending on a student's goals, it could also include extracurricular activities, leadership responsibilities, and possible athletics and/or research involvement. Students may live on campus in a room by themselves or with roommates. Regardless of the room environment, residence hall living requires being in community with others where students must maintain all daily living activities without supervision; pharmaceutical management is not provided.
