

BEST PRACTICES TO PRACTICE REFLECTION

Practicing reflection is something you can do on your own, or in concert with a trusted mentor, advisor, wise counselor, or friend. No matter how you do it, it's critical to learn how to practice reflection if you are going to move forward in your life with intention. Practicing reflection means collecting the data that you need, through feedback conversations and relationship building, so that you can set effective goals to apply what you are learning to your next steps.

Practicing reflection requires:

Practicing reflection allows you to:

Here are some tips for regularly practicing reflection:

ONE SIZE DOESN'T FIT ALL

There is no one right way to practice reflection. What's important is to do what works for you. For some, that means journaling. For others, it means going for a walk or meditating or doing yoga. Whatever helps you to get into a place of honesty, learning, and growth is right where you need to be.

DEVELOP THE HABIT

Try to build in an ongoing practice to develop the habit of practicing reflection. Block out time on your calendar each day and hold that time sacred as you would any other commitment.

ASK "WHAT, SO WHAT, NOW WHAT"

Try the What, So What, Now What method. This is an active practice of identifying and reflecting on actions, feelings, and learning. After you complete a project or assignment, ask yourself:

- What: What just happened? Write down as many action items as you can.
- So What: How do I feel about what just happened? Describe those feelings.
- Now What: Now what do I do with what I learned about myself? Connect the learning to next steps.

TALK ABOUT IT

Share your reflections with a trusted mentor or wise counselor, if you feel comfortable doing so. Sometimes, another person's perspective can deepen our understanding of what we are feeling or learning about ourselves.

So, What's Next?

Commit to a practice of daily reflection this week. Just 15 minutes a day is fine!

Try out several different methods of reflection to figure out what works for you.

At the end of the week, consider: What will you do with what you have learned about yourself? What is a next step you can commit to?